That is the question board members at Catholic Charities of Idaho have been asking themselves. They're boldly going forward with their first charitable tournament, the Cadillac Invitational, June 8 at SpurWing in Meridian.

The tournament, which still has room for sponsors, donations and players, will raise money for Catholic Charities. Organizers have even lowered fees — $125 for an individual player, $500 for a team of four — to attract more participants.

The tournament is part of the national Cadillac Invitational network, which has a good history and adheres to USGA handicap rules, so competitive golfers, say organizers, will be right at home.

More to the point, we don't have to tell you that Catholic Charities of Idaho, founded in 2000, does good work for all of our neighbors in need.

Their work in our community ranges from parent education and support, to help for the elderly and homebound, to their campaign to reduce poverty in Idaho, and much more. And...CCI helps people regardless of their religion, age, gender, disability, race/ethnicity, income or background.

So if you love golf, and are looking for an opportunity to channel your sports passion into a good cause, look no further.

To get involved as a player or sponsor, or just to find out more, contact Catholic Charities of Idaho at 350-7483.
